

Film 3 - What is the role of education?

Too many leaders and governments and business and people in positions of power are still stuck on their bottom lines. Profit, profit, profit, occasionally people, and still not enough clear focus on planet.

And more often than not, these people went to university, they had a good education, so we have to start asking the question: "if that education has encouraged them to only think about profit, what kind of different education do the future leaders need?".

Plus, it's clear the workforce has gaps in its ability to respond to current and future sustainability challenges. Like Net Zero, which report by the company PWC noted is a big risk to businesses.

As graduates, you'll go on to be future professionals in many, many different ways, in many different roles and industries.

Sustainability skills need to be part of all degree courses, not just the more obvious ones, like natural sciences or geography. That's what education for sustainability is all about.